Original publisher: Portland, Or. : Independent Scientific Advisory Board for the Northeast Power Planning Council and the National Marine Fisheries Service, 2001 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)223433461 Subject: Fish habitat improvement -- Columbia River Watershed. Excerpt: . . . ISAB 2001-6 Biological Objectives Review 4. Increase energy and nutrient connections within the system to increase productivity and expand biological communities. This objective stresses the importance of natural nutrient pathways to the maintenance of aquatic and riparian productivity. A bullet explicitly recognizing the importance of salmon carcasses as nutrient sources for a variety of fish, wildlife, and plants would be helpful. Another bullet stating the importance of periodic inundation of floodplains for normal nutrient cycles would be useful. 5. Allow for biological diversity to increase among and within populations and species to increase ecological resilience to environmental variability. Expand the complexity and range of habitats to allow for greater life history and between species diversity. Manage human activities to minimize artificial selection or limitation of life history traits. Restoring habitat and access to habitat that establishes life history diversity is a priority. This objective provides general support for restoring biocomplexity, but does not go into very much detail about how this will be accomplished. Many of the points contained in this objective are restated in other objectives. Again, there is no distinction drawn between native and exotic species. The second bullet appears to call for minimizing artificial production. Was this what was intended The concept of between species diversity needs to be clarified. 6. Increase genetic connections and gene flow within the ecological system to facilitate development, expansion and protection of population structures. Increase the abundance and range of existing habitats and populations. Expand a . . . This item...
